

This course allows students to pursue particular interests within an education framework that meets their needs. It recognizes that there is a broad range of legitimate educational goals and various means to achieving them. Projects undertaken may focus on any topic that has a significant legal component. Within this broad range, the exact focus and method of evaluation are to be determined by the faculty supervisor and student, subject to the approval of the Associate Dean (Academic).

The course is designed to give students and faculty supervisors maximum flexibility. It is envisaged that the projects will not normally include a substantial piece of research and writing. Rather, the written work, if any, might take the form of a book review, critique of legislation, case comment, legal pamphlet, editorial, position paper, or annotated bibliography. The Faculty anticipates that many of the reading and study projects will involve a series of readings and discussions with the faculty supervisor.

Any written work and/or papers are due no later than the last day of classes in the relevant term. Grading for this course is on a Pass/Fail basis and is worth 2 credits. Students may select this option only once in their law school careers.
